Social structure of Indus Valley Civilization

We briefly study the social strata of Indus Valley Civilization (IVC) as obtained from the insight offered by Dravidian decipherment of the author [1] and as well through the various material artifacts unearthed [2, 3].

Seal from Bactria Afghanistan

Source: Massimo [2]
Text: 𒌋: 𒉿𒉿𒅔: ūril-uvan-uḷḷavan
Semantics: The town’s food provider, the all-powerful rich man.
This is a commentary on inequality by an IVC person on Bactria, Afghanistan.

Sumeria vs Meluko (Indus) skirmish

Source: Boehmer [3]
Semantics: This is an encounter between Indus and Sumeria (in the bordering forest region), Indus being depicted by the bull (muri, marru: barter trader denoted by bull, meluko – region of raised forts) and Sumeria by the Lion (urumu, Lion king).
Text: Massimo [2]

From Indus decipherment [1]:
𒀭𒀭 – an-an – annan – elder brother – 𒀭𒌆 – ūran – town-head – ūr-sag (Sumerian)

Indus internal skirmish and resolution

Text: 𒁹𒌋𒌋𒌋 𒌋𒌋𒌋, taḷu-utai

Semantics: Push-kick (skirmish)

Text: 𒁹𒌋𒄀𒄭𒌅, cēru-koṭṭu-tam-ar

Semantics: Fighting among themselves

Text: 𒆠𒀀𒁍𒀭𒋗𒄿𒈨𒌍, kuru-vilaku-ar-kanni-anuppu
Semantics: Send for dispute solver

Semantics: Reports the atrocities in bull province on women/people.
Analogy: Picasso's Guernica:

Communication system of drummers

Barter and marriage between provinces

(cira-kompu-)māṟan(-kulampu)-koḷal

Semantics: barter exchange

cēṟukoḷ cēṟi+koḷal

Semantics: join together (barter)

valaiyan-ūr.il ai-naṭṭu uṭaṉ-ñāṇ

Semantics: Five-province marriage event in trapper's town

Conclusions

Indus Civilization is no egalitarian paradise, as it has it's fair share of disputes, policing and statecraft. On the other hand, it is not an oppressive system of kings and temple priests as in the Sumerian or Elamite civilizations or probably as oppressive as in the Bronze age Bactria BMAC. The class structure in IVC was a nascent form of class system with chieftains of professions, town and provinces with horned head gear, but they had bangles and hair-locks like women, with a social system that has not degraded the status of women to the extent as in the later societies. This is exemplified by the bronze statue of confident working class women standing with her hand supporting her slender hip. However, the first class division, that between men and women, has come about, with men as the ruling chieftains with horned head gear, with the policing of disputes and distribution of food being taken care by bowman of different kind and the bartering being mediated by an expert professionals. A system of messaging by drummers is organized as the main communication system that encourages towns and provinces to exchange goods as well as arrange mass group marriages. The Swastika symbol (deciphered as cerukol – join together) being like the Da Vinci Code, the magical word that calls for the mixing of people across clans, towns and provinces.

References

[1] Venkatesan, S.K., (2025) Decipherment of Indus Valley Script, https://github.com/Sukii/decipher-ivc

[2] Massimo, V., (2026) New insights on the Urban phase of the Indus Valley tradition, https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Xv_6aZEpj9Q

[3] Boehmer, R.M., (1965) Die Entwicklung der Glyptik während der Akkad-Zeit, De Gruyter, Berlin